DEBATERS WIN CHAMPIONSHIP

By a 2 to 1 verdict the Northwest School debate team, coached by E. W. Avery, defeated their ancient rivals from the West Central School, Morris, in the local auditorium, March 9, thus winning for the first time in years the undisputed championship of the conference. Members of the affirmative team, Mervin Hough, Bagley, Harvey Johnson, Rollag, and Winton Knutson, Thief River Falls, representing the Northwest School, realized that their opponents would be versatile, not only in their main speeches, but armed to the teeth in rebuttal. Consequently, they entered the contest full prepared, and with a determination to hold their own in both thought and delivery.

The question under discussion was "Resolved, that the United States government should cease to protect by armed force, domestic capital invested in foreign lands without first a formal declaration of war." In defending the negative side of this question, the Morris team, composed of Earl Hanson, Martha Keeler, and Leonard Stahler, reflected much credit on their veteran coach, Professor Long. It may be of interest to add that the visitors came naturally by their platform ability, for Miss Keeler's father, Representative Keeler, from Chokio, and Professor Long's father, Senator Long, from Park Rapids, were delegated as speakers to represent the House and Senate at the Red River Valley Livestock Breeders' banquet, held in Crookston during the recent Winter Shows week.

Unanimous Verdict at Fargo

The Northwest School negative team, not to be outdone, by their classmates who supported the affirmative against Morris, returned from the encounter at the Fargo Agricultural School with a unanimous verdict, thus clinching the championship. Members of the negative team included Wilfred Knutson, Clearbrook; Chester Torgerson, Fergus Falls, and Kenneth Flom, Twin Valley, with Theodore Anden, Fergus Falls, and Sanna Hanson, Wanke, alternates.

Coach E. W. Avery is to be congratulated on this well earned double victory. His debaters not only met their opponents on an equal footing in their main arguments, but proved invincible in rebuttal.

COW TESTERS' SHORT COURSE

The fourth annual Cow Testers' Short Course will be held at the Northwest School during the week of April 1 to 5. This course will be in charge of Professor E. A. Hanson and his staff from University Farm, St. Paul, together with assistance from O. M. Kiser, Station Animal husbandman. The five day course of instruction will include practical laboratory work with the Babcock tester, discussions on record keeping, rations for the dairy cow, and suggestions on the organization and management of testing associations. The primary object of the course is to prepare young men for the management of new associations and to fill vacancies in established associations.

Board and room may be secured at the Northwest School at the regular rate of $5.25 per week. One dollar will be required as a deposit to cover breakage. All who wish rooms in the dormitory should bring necessary bedding.

Those interested in this course should write to the Superintendent of the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston.

TIE FOR BASKETBALL

CHAMPIONSHIP

In one of the most thrilling games ever played on the West Central School of Agriculture floor, the Northwest School Aggies trounced their most formidable opponents 12 to 11 in the first game of a double header played early in March.

Irvin scored the first field goal for Morris, but was quickly followed by counters from Fisher and Odland, local Aggie forwards. The first quarter ended Crookston 6, Morris 4. Early in the second quarter Cain broke loose for a beautiful basket, followed by a free throw. The score at the half was Crookston 9, Morris 4. Morris came back with a rush at the opening of the second half and scored a basket during the first three minutes of play. Cain countered with another sensational shot, followed by Johnson's free throw, which brought the score to 12-7 in favor of Crookston at the end of the third quarter. Morris added another field goal and two free throws during the fourth period, the game ending 12 to 11. The LaVoi basket tossers depended on short passes, backed up by effective guarding, which proved too much for the West Central Aggies, who attempted to win by long shots at the basket.

The line-up for the Crookston Aggies in the first game was as follows: Martin Odland, Verndale, and Roy Fisher, Beltrami, forwards; Thomas Cain, Ponemah, center; Elmer Johnson, Erskine, and George Berggren, Greenbush, guards; substitute, Lawrence Elton, Hawley, for Odland. In the Morris lineup were Halgorson, Irvin, Giese, Apmann, and MacArthur.

The second game, played in the Morris Armory, resulted in a victory for the West Central Aggies, with a score of 21 to 11. Throughout the first half, the Crookston Aggies followed the same style of play they had used on the smaller home floor, with the result that Morris led by a wide margin at the end of the half. Adapting their play to the larger floor, they outscored their opponents during the last half. Captain Harry Confer, Angus, led the scoring for the local team in the latter game. Other members of the squad who accompanied the team to Morris included Harold Nelson, Hawley, and Harold

The dining hall was beautifully decorated with the Junior class colors and flowers, while the special favors added much to the appearance of the banquet tables.

From the Symphony Cocktail to the Harmony Cookies, and on through the toast program, the theme was reminding of music.

SCHWANTES DISCUSSES COMBINE HARVESTER

Red River Valley farmers were greatly interested in the discussion of the combine harvester-thresher, presented by Professor A. J. Schwantes, of the University of Minnesota, during the Northwest School Farmers' week held in Crookston last month. A brief summary of Mr. Schwantes' address follows:

"The combine harvester-thresher is a machine that will harvest and clean the grain in one operation. While it is a new idea as far as we are concerned in this section, the combine harvester as such is not new. The first patent that was granted on a machine of this kind in this country was granted to a man living in the state of Maine in 1828. During the middle part of the last century several patents have been granted on combine harvesters and several of these machines have been built. Development did not occur in this country, however, until about 1880, when large size combines were built and operated successfully in California. They had large fields, a scarcity of labor and they also had dry weather during the time of harvesting which made it possible for them to leave the grain stand in the field before harvesting until it was sufficiently dry so that it would keep in storage.

"During the harvest season of 1927 eleven such machines were used in Minnesota. This is the first time the combine harvester was used in this state. During the past season of 1928 thirty-eight more were purchased by farmers, making a total of 49 in use at that time.

"The biggest problem that is confronted by the Minnesota farmers in connection with the use of the combine harvester is the fact that the grain at regular binder harvest time is not sufficiently dry so that it will keep in storage. It is necessary, therefore, to leave it stand for a week or ten days or perhaps even longer than that before cutting with the combine. The average farmer is somewhat concerned about the advisability of delaying the harvesting of his crop after it is ready to cut with a binder. It is believed by many that the losses through shattering and lodging during this period would be very high. Experiments conducted by the Agronomy Division of the University of Minnesota, Department of Agriculture, indicate that these losses ordinarily are practically negligible. A number of varieties were studied, and it was found that there was a difference in some of the varieties, but as a whole there is not very much loss from shattering after binder harvest time, provided there is no rain in the meantime. If there is rainy weather, this period is prolonged and the loss is higher.

"Another reason for moist grain that has been combined is the presence of weeds. If weeds must be included when the threshing is done, a certain amount of green weed material is bound to be in the threshed grain. This will raise the moisture content of the grain usually to such a point where it is unsafe for storage purposes, even though the moisture content of the grain kernel itself is sufficiently dry.

"If it were possible by means of some sort of a grain cleaner to clean out all of the moist weed particles at the time of combining, this problem would be solved. That, however, is a very difficult operation, and in some instances practically impossible to do a perfect job of cleaning.

"The windrow method of combine harvesting has been resorted to take care of the weed problem and also to hasten the normal harvest time to a certain extent. A windrower is a machine which is very much like the platform of a binder. It will cut the grain and lay it on the stubble in a windrow about three feet wide. Windrowers are made in sizes taking a 12 foot or a 16 foot swath. The grain which is laid in the windrow remains there for a period of several days or a week; then it is picked up by means of a pick-up attachment on the combine harvester and it is threshed.

"Experiments which have been conducted on the use of the windrower indicate that it bears a very useful purpose in the presence of weeds. During the period while the windrow is drying, the weed plants also become dry and consequently the weeds do not bother any more. On the other hand, it does not appear that this method will save very much time over straight combining in cases where there are no weeds present. In other words, it will take the grain almost as long to dry out in the windrow as it would if it were left standing.

"Many are fearful that these windrows would not remain on the stubble very long and that in case of severe weather they would soon drop to the ground, where it would be practically impossible for them to dry out again. It has been possible to make observations during the past season which indicate that that there are no grounds for such a belief. Windrows that went through heavy rain and several days wet weather dried out again in a very short time and remained on top of the stubble in such a manner that the air could circulate freely underneath the windrows."
